

My Internet connection has become an essential utility, both for my profession and as an essential tool for communicating privately and publicly. It is imperative that users are able to select from a variety of ISPs. Proper government regulation can guarantee this freedom of choice while providing a reasonable return on investment for the hardware